Watching, weary, and forsaken. The secret of its authorship was not made public; but it is now no longer a secret, certainly it never occurred to me to look for its author in the class-room of a Scotch university. Thomas Davidson's history has just been given to the world in a volume entitled "The Life of a Scotch Probationer, being a Memcir of Thomas Davidson, with his Poems and Extracts from his Letters." by James Brown, Minister of St. James's street Church. Paisley, &c.

Thomas Davidson, the son of a shepherd was born at Oxnam Row, near Jedburgh, on July 7th, 1838. What he had to contend against in his too brief life, Mr. Brown has told us with a sympathetic, but withal discriminating, pen.

"Ariadne at Naxos" was written by David. son in the spring of 1859, when in his twentyfirst year. It was written as a competition poom in the Rhetoria and Belles-Lettres Class in the University of Edinburgh, then presided over by so famous a man av the late Professor Ayteun. If the competition resulted but in gaining to Davidson the second prize, there were congenial spirits around him whose instincts were perhanal occupant of the chair. Without Davidson's of the "Cornhill Magazine:" but I shall best narrate the incident in Mr. Brown's own

Besides "Ariadne at Naros." Mr. Brown has given other specimens of Davidson's muse. The following is one of them :-THE COURSE OF PETGNED LOVE NEVER DID BUY SHOOT!

Love is a rose, a rose. A-demy-dawning fose: . Earth, Heaven, and the sonls of men were made But to minister where it grows; Where it grows. Love is a rose, a rose, But a something thorny rose;
